New York, 15.—Judge Davis, at a late hour te-night, sent a communication to newspaper offices, in which he says he is satisfied that in giving a summary of Josph Hart's testimony in the Philp case from his memorands and recollection, he fell into error, which did injustice to Mr. Hawitt. It is his duty to correct it. The text of the letter had been published, and it he lithograph or face simile had not, and it was to determine whether the letter hould be lithographed and published in face simile that Hart sought the opinion of Hawitt and others as to its genuineness. In every other particular the Judge says he believes the evidence and all the information made by him from have wholly justified by the tacts, and then the Judge goes on to show how the error wholly justified by the tacts, and then the Judge goes on to show how the error wheeling justified by the tacts, and then the Judge goes on to show how the error whether it is of any material significance in forming a correct opinion of his constitution in the affair. He says the letter happened to be made and to inquire whether it is of any material significance in forming a correct opinion of his conduct in the affair. He says the letter as at first published, would have fallen still-born, as a silly and useless forgery if it had not been taken up and carried through the photographic and lithographic fac similes, on the shoulders of the national committee, and Mr. Hewiti's stronger character. Nobody charged or suspected Hewitt of being guilty of the forgery, but my belief was and still is that but for him and his course, the forgery would never have been picked out of the gutter in which it was born, and hurled into the canvass with the deadly power of his endorsement, and that of the national committee. The least then adds, some portions of the lestimony of Hart, going, he thicks, to show that his (Judge Davis') mistake was one at most of more phraseology. He then goes on to say that the testimony had not been written out, and he had raused on his brief note the most important points. In conclusion, Judge Davis says: "It is a great mistake in Mr. Hewitt, to suppose that his testimony and his conduct were not the legitimate subject of judicial criticism, when he apseared as a witness under such circumstances, and my opinion in the case, for whatever it may be worth, will stand unaltered as to bim, except in the single particular above suggested."
